Japanese No Plays Zemmaro Toki

From the cover flap: "No is a form of ancient Japanese stage art characterized by the use of masks and by dance and song performed to the accompaniment of instrumental music. This six-hundred-year-old art has changed very little since its inception and, to understand either its appeal or its highly stylized conventions, the Western observer today needs a guide. Such a guide is this new and profusely illustrated book, and one which should make the viewing and the understanding of this ancient art at once more profitable and more pleasurable. The text discusses the historical background and present characteristics of no, including the stage, costumes, masks and the styles of production. A discussion of the actors and their training and techniques, the rhythmic chants and orchestral accompaniment should be interesting both to the novice and the advanced student of no. Chapters on the appreciation, classification and literary significance of the no are included.
