At 30 years old Malik thought he was doing ok as a tattoo artist and owning his own shop. He worked with the woman he loved but he hadn't told her that yet. He thought his past was behind him and accepted. But in truth it was only ignored. Hunted by his past in the form of a killer or the police, either way he was now on the run. You wake up and your entire world has changed. Either for the good or the bad it has changed. It might just be your appearance or it may be the appearance of what you thought your life was. You're left with a choice; Do you accept the change or exert the effort to change it? Is changing what has changed even possible? The answer is always in the mirror and nowhere else but you must also ask yourself what has not changed. Has your passion changed? Has your fear changed? Has the anger changed? Has your past changed? Has what's driven you changed? How far will you go to change what has changed? The eyes that stare back haven't changed. Whether it's the eyes of an artist, a lover, a killer, a vigilante or an addict, one truth remains the same for all. Freedom exists only for those who have given up all hope of attaining a better past.
