Consider the insanity of our situation: We've enough nuclear weapons to destroy our species on this planet thousands of times over. We elect one person to determine when, and if, these armaments should be used. What if that individual: A) secretly hates us? B) is suicidal? C) is insane? D) is any combination of the above? Are we really stupid enough to believe humans can survive forever, moments from nuclear annihilation? Understand something: It's been bottom of the ninth, two outs and two strikes, since we developed enough atomic weaponry to obliterate ourselves over 50 years ago. That said, no team in history has ever avoided strike three. To quote the movie War Games: "The only winning move is not to play." Which begs the obvious question: "Then why have nukes in the first place?" From the WWBHSA911? blog comes further insight into reality.
